Are you planning a party in the Denver area? And have yet to book a great band? I just came across this article currently being featured on The Denver Daily News.

Apparently, the Jonny Mogambo Band is the cat's meow for Denver-area bands. A Denver Daily News employee attended the recent wedding for the publication's Assistant Editor Peter Marcus and his wife, Barbara. They thought that the Jonny Mogambo Band "rocked the house."

In the music industry, wedding bands are typically considered cheesy and good talent is tough to find. But on occasion, a group like the Jonny Mogambo Band plays a wedding reception and gets everyone — including the reclusive uncle — out on the dance floor to shake their stuff, elevating the festivities to a whole different level. It doesn't hurt that Mogambo and his talented backing band aren't just a wedding and private party band; the legitimate talents play original music, too.

However, when it came to a wedding in Breckenridge earlier this month, Mogambo gave attendees exactly what they wanted, combining Johnny Cash, Talking Heads and Little Richard's "Tutti Frutti," among many other bands and songs.

"I think we play a different array of music and we play it well," said Mogambo. "We're not anywhere close to a cheesy wedding band ... People appreciate having a band that plays a large amount of music and also has some originals and originality to them."- The Denver Daily News
